Vaccinations: Not If, but When

The American Animal Hospital Association (AAHA) has revised its recommendations regarding annual vaccinations. These recommendations must be secondary to your dog's individual needs, health issues, travel plans, geographic considerations and living conditions.

Many veterinary schools are re-thinking the need for annual booster shots for distemper, parvovirus, adenovirus 1 & 2, parainfluenza virus and corona virus. While most dogs receive their boosters without a problem, some pets experience an allergic reaction to the boosters. Some research by these schools has shown the boosters may stimulate the immune system to trigger it to respond against the dog's own tissue. Some vets have gone as far as stating that over-vaccination can lead to ear infections, allergies, thyroid ailments and even cancer; vaccinations overstress the immune system that then manifest itself in some other ailment.

So what should you do? Discuss the following topics with your veterinarian to ensure that your dog gets the vaccinations he needs:

- Your dog's age, breed and health history, including any reactions to past shots.
- Lifestyle and activities: Do you go to a dog park, the beach, agility or canine classes, or hikes in the woods? Is he boarded frequently with Pets Are Inn or go to dog shows?
- Local geographic considerations: Does your dog live or romp in or near a wooded area? Is your city experiencing an epidemic that is affecting pets?
- Your dog's overall current health
- Titer Test – blood samples are sent to a lab for testing of the antibodies within the pet to certain diseases. This may take 4 – 6 weeks. We will honor the result of these tests. They will give you a report with the antibody levels and if they are an acceptable range.
- Your vet's vaccine philosophy.

If you would like more information on this topic you can go the AAHA's web site, www.healthypet.com/library/prevent-22.html, the June 2003 issue of Dog Fancy or www.whole-dog-journal.com (December 2002).

Jeez, I Just Hate That!

There isn't much out there that bugs a dog. But there are times when things can get under the skin of even the "coolest" dogs. Here are some of their top pet peeves . . . from the mouths of dogs themselves.

1. Leaving the toilet bowl lid down.

Humans just don't understand that the water is cold, fresh and always tastes better there.

2. Not sharing in the fruits of your labor.

I don't mean "fruit" actually. I mean that beautiful, 1½-inch steak you cooked to such aromatic perfection. We're all part of the pack, right? Why am I not getting my share?

3. Not understanding my behavior.

Okay, so I like to greet strangers by leaping on them. I like to chase my tail by that lead crystal vase you call an heirloom. I'm not misbehaving; I'm a dog for crying out loud. It's all good and, like shadow chasing, helps build eye-to-paw coordination.

4. Bathing.

What is with the daily bath "thing" that humans do? And why do they inflict that obscenity upon me on occasion? Just when I think I am smelling fine, they bathe me. I really don't understand. I'm only going to go out and roll in "something" again. They just don't appreciate the effort it takes to get that perfect doggie odor.

5. Rushing me to potty. Don't they know that there is a true art to finding the right spot? Just because they did not get up in time, they are running late, they want me to "hurry up and potty." Have a little respect. This is my chance to shine.

6. Being away. I love attention and being around people, noise and excitement. When you are away, at work, or running errands . . . this is time away from me. Don't you know? It is ALL about me. Your life should revolve around me AND I can make you regret leaving me behind...

7. Nail trims. They are my nails—I spend lots of time growing them and here they come again touching my feet. I hate that!

8. Not letting me chase the squirrel.

They torment me by placing a "glass wall" between me and lots of critters outside. How annoying. All I want to do is "play" with them. The other thing they do is restrain me with this thing called the leash. I want to run forward and I am pulled back. If they can't keep up, they should just let me go. What's a dog to do?

9. Catnip. Now this is one peeve that really annoys me. I see the cat roll and play and even cry out in joy in response to catnip. I smell it, eat it, lick it and . . . nothing happens. Nothing. I don't get it.

10. Not letting me at the mailman.

This is so unfair. I wait all day for the mailman and finally he comes. The anticipation is great. Then, they hold me back. Tell me to be quiet. Very annoying. They don't appreciate the fact that the mailman comes every day and I single-handedly scare him away. My bravery and courage are unappreciated.

11. When my owner is playing with the other dog or cat. This really hurts my feelings, seeing MY owner play with someone else. It is all about me . . . they really don't understand.

12. Won't let me at the litter box.

I think of it as an opportunity for a tootsie roll snack. My owners get all grossed out, run around and then actually deny me access to what I desire the most. I am actually helping to clean up. What's the problem?

13. Expecting me to be at their beck and call.

For a treat—I have to do some little humiliating trick and pretend I like it. What about independence, freedom and respect?

14. Sharing the bed.

I don't understand why I have to sleep on the floor. Why can't I have the bed and they sleep on the floor? I work hard all day and night. I protect my owners, guard the house and scare away invaders of my castle such as the mailman, cats, squirrels, and a multitude of other creatures. I should be pampered.

15. Rolling up the windows.

I feel such joy from the little words, "wanna go bye bye?" This gives me thoughts of having the window down with cool wind blowing through my fur, looking just dynamite as other dogs stare from the curbs in envy and awe. And just when I am really getting into it—head out, ears flapping, they roll up the window. Then I am forced to stare at other dogs going by with their heads out the window. Mega bummer.

...and one more for good measure:

16. Cats. What really makes me angry is the agility and grace of cats. They have the gifted ability to jump up on things and escape under things with such ease. I really wish I could do that. When I try to do that, I inevitably break or knock something over.

knows what else. You can supplement my diet with fatty acids such as many vegetable oils, including sunflower and safflower. However, the best source is fish oil, although flaxseed also contains it. Buy a bottle of fish oil tablets from the drug store and give them to me as a treat. (They are also good for you, so I will share!)

A Word About Tipping

From time to time our customers ask whether they should tip the drivers or host families. Pets Are Inn is a service company and, as with all service companies, tipping is a way to say thanks for a nice job. Our staff works very hard to get your pets to and from your home safely, to relay information and supplies accurately. If you appreciate the effort that is made, then they will be grateful for your tip. If you do wish to tip, please let us know if you wish it to go to the chauffeur or the host family. Thank you for asking!

Wanna be a Host Family?

Pets Are Inn is always looking for families who love animals to keep pets for us. As our business grows, so does the need for qualified families. If you or someone you know would like the company of another pet and would like a little extra money, please give us a call.

New Customer Referral

Thank you for telling your friends and neighbors.
